A range = superior work, i.e. exceptional university-level work

B range = above average work, i.e. very good university-level work

D range = passing, yet unsatisfactory or below average work

F = failing work, that is to say insufficient, incomplete, or inferior work

You are paying a great deal of money to attend Berry College and your grades play a significant role in your future. As the instructor of this course, I see my role as a messenger: When a student does an assignment carefully and extremely well, I deliver an "A" on that assignment, and if a student sustains such superior work throughout the course, I report an "A" grade to the Registrar for that student at the end of the semester. When students choose to do less than outstanding work, or do mediocre or no work, I deliver the appropriate grade. With this approach, of course, I do not curve grades either on assignments or at the end of the course. It is possible that every student will sustain superior work over the course of the semester and consequently earn an "A" grade. I have had classes where quite a number of students made the choice to do so. I also have had classes where many students selected much lower grades.
